Montgomery County, Pennsylvania

Montgomery County, which is home to over 800,000 residents in 62 townships and boroughs, is a diverse and historic community located directly northwest of the city of Philadelphia. The county landscape ranges from wooded hills and rolling farmlands in the west to mature suburbs next to Philadelphia, from old towns and river boroughs on county rail lines to modern office parks and business centers along county highways.

Montgomery County has always been a center of commerce and transportation in southeastern PA, and this role has intensified throughout the recent decades, as the county's population has more than doubled while employment throughout the county has more than tripled. With nearly half a million jobs, Montgomery County is an economic powerhouse, leading the state in manufacturing jobs, as it imports tens of thousands of workers from neighboring counties. Although the county is economically diverse, it is particularly strong in pharmaceuticals, health care, electronics, computer services, insurance, industrial machinery, retailing, and meat processing. Major companies throughout the county include Merck and Company, Abington Memorial Hospital, GlaxoSmithKline, Lockheed Martin, Hatfield Quality Meats, and Aetna/U.S. Healthcare.

Much of this employment strength is due to the county's proximity to major transportation routes. Montgomery County is conveniently located at the intersection of several important highways including the Pennsylvania Turnpike, Route 476 and the Schuylkill Expressway. The County also has a number of major freight rail lines, numerous utility pipelines, and extensive public transit facilities.

Before the Second World War, the county's population was concentrated near Philadelphia and in several large towns such as Norristown, Pottstown, and Lansdale. Since that time, the population has spread out along the Pennsylvania Turnpike and other major highways. This progress has allowed the eastern and central portions of the county to rapidly develop. Currently this new growth is moving westward, especially along the Pottstown Expressway (Route 422).

Being one of the richest counties in Pennsylvania, most of Montgomery County residents enjoy comfortable lifestyles. Residents are served by graceful housing, quality schools and hospitals, extensive natural and historical parks including Valley Forge National Park, numerous public libraries, four large malls, over one-hundred shopping centers, a wide selection of senior citizen housing, and many well known colleges and universities such as Bryn Mawr, Ursinus, and Gwynedd Mercy.

Over the next couple of decades Montgomery County's population is projected to grow steadily at a rate of about 5% a decade, reaching an estimated population of 894,000 by the year 2040. This future population will most likely be older and more racially diverse than the county's current one, with an opportunity to work in an even wider range and larger number of jobs than current residents now enjoy.
